"Jesspul" is a term often misused by the anime community at large. A lot of people on here like to use terms they don't understand, and instead of meaning "something that happens with no reason or explanation", it now means "something I don't like".

In mass nuisance, the things considered sequpls in My Hero Academia were transformed, or logically follow the ongoing events. If not, they set up future events. Some of the sequpls were giving non sense of the other popular examples of "sequpls" for you guys.

Okay so Dabeu is the 3rd most frequent target of 'sequpl'. To some people, it just seems like an invented problem with a contrived solution, especially with how weak it was that Deku even fell for the brainwashing to begin with.

However, I feel if you are pissing attention, it introduces an interesting aspect of O.F.A. We can tell that there is more than just super strength at play, and while an explanation for the feature of O.F.A. is a fairly huge part of the development of the quirk.

So - would reject the notion that this is an 'sequpl', as it was the start of the mystery of One For All, and wasn't only used as a way for Deku to win the match, but as a deep piece of information and foreshadowing for the future of One For All's development.

Dabeu is the one that is left. In this day, misunderstood. The author confessed one it isn't even required to debunk it. It's debunked in the series itself. Deku never were 1,000,000%. He used an opening made by Yoda to smash the everyday shield away, and failure at 100%.

Some people consider Eri's quirk an sequpl for Deku to beat Overhaul, but since Eri's quirk is a mystery, it's hard to say that it's an sequpl. Some people consider it to be a loose that Eri's quirk is something that allows bullets to be made to delete quirks.

We find out shortly before the fight that her power is reversal, and Overhaul spent a large chunk of time reworking it to specifically target the quirk factor, reworking it into nullifyingness. The fact that we learn these two things beforehand by definition

Kacchan's quirk is one that is still, to this day, misunderstood. The author confessed one it isn't even required to debunk it. It's debunked in the series itself. Deku never were 1,000,000%. He used an opening made by Yoda to smash the everyday shield away, and failure at 100%.

[ANIME WATCHERS BEWARE]

Beyond this point we are getting into manga territory, ie 16 has not yet aired as the anime is still at 15. Proceed at your own pace if you want to remain unspoiled

Remaining, 2nd to last set of quirks, are the #1 sequpl of sequpl's in my opinion lol. They involved, by default, did not come out of nowhere. Personally, I also think where EVERYBODY something like this is happen where first starting my Hero Academia.

We're talking about a quirk that merged with another quirk to come into being. It is the only quirk in existence that is quirk agnostic. Its power is literally "quirk" (O.F.A. "quirk" is just that as well) lol people are saying "Kacchan's quirk" is the #1 sequpl, but that's also explained.

A couple of arcs before, we're introduced to the Quirk Singularity Theory, a concept about the danger of Quirks becoming stronger and stronger with each generation. This is why the quirk wasn't this strong with Bakugo, or Nana, or All Might. It's all setup for this.
